

PRESS RELEASE

Jörg Maskow hands over Krüger & Salecker to Successors

Since 31st July, 2020 a new management is in charge of Krüger & Salecker Maschinenbau GmbH & Co. KG (K&S). Jörg Maskow the owner and managing director for many years has handed over the company based in Bad Schwartau/Germany. Tammo Bettex since 2013 Technical Director with Krüger & Salecker and his cousin Sören Bettex so far responsible for strategic planning and organisational development in various companies and organisations have taken over. Andreas Eule a businessman from Kiel is a further member of the new team having acquired a minority share.

Jörg Maskow: „My objective always was to develop K&S to become a global player and to establish the company as well-known enterprise. This aim was achieved during the past 17 years and I am very happy to hand this company over to a competent team of successors. I am convinced that the road to success will continue.“

About Krüger & Salecker:

In 1948 Krüger & Salecker was founded in Lübeck/Germany and after the war and times of shortage they started manufacturing plates and cutlery for kitchen equipment. Only a short time later the focus concentrated on the manufacture of machinery for the sugar industry. However, the fabrication of special purpose machinery for various branches always represented an important part of the activities. In 2003 Jörg Maskow took over the company where he had started working as Technical Director some years before and developed it to a world-wide operating hidden champion. Today the Krüger & Salecker personnel numbers about 50 employees at the Bad Schwartau site and they have acquired a leading position especially in the field of moulding technology for the food, chemical, bakery and pet food industry. In the past the company was awarded the "Großer Preis des Deutschen Mittelstandes" (Award of medium-sized German enterprises) several times as finalist of more than 12,000 enterprises.
